The author in compiling this volume has depended to a great extent upon friends and relatives of the different branches of the family, among whom Wallace Sigerson has furnished some very valuable facts in a paper written in 1878.

The volume deals principally with the family of John Wallace, my grandfather, as little is know of the other branches.

Hoping that my efforts to compile and preserve for future generations the record of the family will be appreciated, I am

Yours truly,

J. W.

The Wallace family is of Scotch descent, said to be descended from the illustrious statesman and warrior, Sir William Wallace, hero of "Scottish Chiefs".

William Wallace came from Scotland or Ireland to the colony of Virginia about 1730, and lived in Albemarle county, where his family was born and reared. The family consisted of four sons, and at least, one daughter, perhaps more, viz: John, William, Michael, Josiah and Hannah (Woods). Nothing is known of the families of William and Josiah.

Michael had one son, Michael, who settled in Madison county, Kentucky, and died there. His widow removed with her family to Decatur county, Indiana.

The only remaining members of the family are Mrs. Nancy Warden, of Xenia, Ohio, and John A. Wallace, of Jefferson county, Indiana.

John A. Wallace raised a family of four children, John, Samuel, Laura and Alice M. John resides near Madison, Indiana, and has four children, three sons and one daughter. Samuel is a groceryman in Hanover, Indiana, and has four children, two sons and two daughters. Laura (McMillan) died some years ago leaving one son, John, who is now eighteen years of age, and is studying dentistry. Alice M. is a teacher in the public schools in Hanover, Indiana.

Collins' History of Kentucky gives the following thrilling account of an adventure in the life of the sister, Hannah Woods:

"In the year 1784 or 1785, near the Crab Orchard, in Lincoln county, a very singular adventure occurred at the home of a Mr. Woods. One morning he left his family, consisting of a wife and a daughter, not yet grown, and a lame negro man, and rode off to a station near by, not expecting to return till night. Mrs. Woods, being a short distance from her cabin, was alarmed by discovering several Indians advancing towards it. She instantly screamed loudly, in order to give the alarm, and ran with utmost speed, in hope of reaching the house before them. In this she succeeded, but before she could close the door the foremost Indian had forced his way into the house. He was instantly seized by the lame negro man and, after a short scuffle, they both fell with violence, the negro underneath. Mrs. Woods was too busily engaged in keeping the door shut against the party without to attend to the combatants, but the lame negro, holding the Indian tightly in his arms, called to the young girl to take the axe from under the bed and dispatch him by a blow on the head. She immediately attempted it, but the first attempt was a failure. She repeated the blow and killed him.

"The other Indians were at the door trying to force it open with their tomahawks. The negro rose and proposed to Mrs. Woods to let in another and they would soon dispose of the whole of them in the same manner.

"The cabin was but a short distance from the station, the occupants of which having discovered the perilous situation of the family, fired on the Indians and killed another, when the remainder made their escape."

JOHN WALLACE

John Wallace, the elder brother, was born in 1732, and lived six miles from Monticello, Virginia. He came from there to Kentucky in the spring of 1783, and stopped at Crab Orchard one year. From there he, with his wife, (whose name was Whorry before marriage), and children went to the north side of the Kentucky river and settled in Jessamine county, about ten miles from Lexington. His wife died there and was buried at Pisgah "Meeting House," in Woodford county. Their family consisted of seven children, viz: Hannah, Rosanna, Polly, John, Patsy, Thomas and Betsy. About the year 1800 he moved from Kentucky to Monroe, Ohio. In 1812, the family, under the leadership of the eldest brother, John, moved to Wayne county, Indiana, where John had entered land in the fall of 1811.

The family at that time consisted of the father, two sons, John. and Thomas, and one daughter, Betsy, all single. The war broke out, and being only two miles from the Indian boundary lines, they were in danger from Indian raids. The first summer Betsy was sent into the older settlement on what was called the East Fork of Whitewater, and lived in the family of a Mr. Hunt. The father lived until about the year 1820. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, and a soldier of the Revolutionary War. The powder horn carried by him through the war is now in the possession of his grandson, John Wallace.

HANNAH WALLACE

The family of Hannah Philips consisted of four children, William, Polly, Sally and Jane. All are dead.

ROSANNA WALLACE

The family of Rosanna Stout consisted of four children, Mollie, Susan, Nancy and an infant. But one living at last account.

POLLY WALLACE

The family of Polly Sigerson consisted of seven children, James, Wallace, Margaret (Reed), John, William, Mary, (died single), and Nancy (Sunderland). Only two now living, William at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, and Nancy in Burlington, Iowa.

JOHN WALLACE
(Subject of this sketch)

PATSY WALLACE

The family of Patsy Cassaday consisted of six children, Polly, William, Samuel, Betsy, Nancy and James. Only two now living, Polly (Ammons) somewhere in Illinois, and Samuel at Mason, Ohio.

THOMAS WALLACE

He was a successful farmer, and for some months lived in the neighborhood of Crawfordsville, Indiana, where he took sick of measles and died, unmarried, about the year 1830, and as near as can be ascertained, was about thirty-five years of age. At the time of his death he owned the east half of the farm now belonging to Isaac Kinsey.

Wallace Sigerson, in his account of him, says: "Of all the young men I have known in a long life, he was preeminently the Model Man. He was medium size, weight, summer and winter, 144 pounds. Physically, the best man of his size I have ever seen, possessing an endurance that was unheard of in the country where he lived. He has said he could never lift nor work hard enough to tire him. In morals and religious character he had no equal among men where he lived. In disposition, noble and generous almost to a fault. He was a good neighbor, and would drop his work, no matter how pressing, and go at their call. He commanded the love and respect of all who knew him. He had been heard to say if there was such a thing as fear, he had never experienced it. He was never sick until he contracted the disease of which he died.

BETSY WALLACE

The family of Betsy Dennis consisted of four children, Warren, Franklin, Nancy and Thomas. Only two living at last account, Franklin in Missouri, and Nancy in California.
